Lab 10

Andrew Hopkins CM: 1164

1. HAML is a markup language for HTML. I feel like HAML is not necessary, I feel like HTML is just as good.
2. The only difference I can find is some differences in syntax and that web testing testing requires more configuration files.
3. I feel like it isn't worth it for some project since you will probably spend more time writing the tests then you do actually developing stuff. For larger projects it might be worthwhile to use it to automate your testing.